U.S. MEMORIAL FOR LYCHING VICTIMS OPENED

The first monument of its kind in the United States to pay tribute to over 4,000 Black victims of lynchings in the South has opened. The memorial, which covers 6 acres, features columns which represent each county where lynchings took place. Each column includes the engraved names of lynching victims.

Close by, a new museum called "From Enslavement to Mass Incarceration", was built on the exact spot where a former slave warehouse and auction house stood. This museum will document the history of slavery to the mass imprisonment of Black Americans today.

Both the monument and museum were created to not only commemorate the victims but expose parts of the country’s history rooted in racism and discrimination.

Program Spotlight

FACUL-TEA TIME HOSTED BY "NO LABELS"

When: October 17th at 6pm

Where: Intercultural Resource Center (EUC 062)

What: Facul-Tea Time created a space for students to share ways in which faculty and staff can make gender diverse students more comfortable in their classrooms. No Labels members invited questions about identities faculty/staff might not fully understand, ways academic spaces can be more inclusive, the experiences of gender diverse students at UNCG, and more.

No Labels is a student organization for queer students of color and their advocates.

Put It Into Practice

NATIONAL PRONOUN DAY OCT. 17TH

Pronouns are words that a person may use to identify themselves instead of using their chosen name. One way we can be more inclusive and create a welcoming environment for the LGBTQIA+ community is to be mindful of how we use pronouns.

Now that you know, it’s time for you to put it into practice.

When introducing yourself with your chosen name, include your pronouns. It’s a great way to challenge the norm that pronouns should be assumed. Introducing your chosen pronouns also creates space for those that might identify as transgender, queer, or non-binary to also share.
